

OUR JOURNEY

We make the wines we like to drink: classic, old world style wines that speak for themselves. To us, winemaking is an art form; and growing grapes, a sacred stewardship. It requires passion, diligence, and creativity to make memorable, world-class wines. — John & Nancy Lasseter

In 1993, John and Nancy Lasseter moved to the town of Sonoma, and they soon discovered the art of winemaking through a small group of winemaking friends. As time went on, their passion evolved from simple wine appreciation to a point where they realized they had become very much immersed in the winemaking process.

With the desire to craft wines in an old world style, the Lasseters started making wine at Remick Ridge in 2000. The dream of Lasseter Family Winery was slowly evolving, and John and Nancy began to consider options for a winery of their own. When a historic Sonoma Valley winery and vineyard property (in need of significant restoration and renovation) became available in 2002, they decided it was the perfect place to continue their story.

In their quest to make world-class wines, the Lasseters partnered with Sonoma County winemaker Julia Iantosca. John and Nancy's passion for blended wines perfectly matches Julia's approach to winemaking, and together they have been fine-tuning the estate vineyards, developing signature blends and meticulously defining the Lasseter Family Winery house style. Additionally, the cellar team brings an intimate knowledge of Sonoma Valley winemaking to the adventure.

Today, three generations of the Lasseter family are working together to make distinctive wines that are elegant and uncompromising, informed by art, and produced with a convivial approach to the family business.
