

California, Rosé Wines, Wine Reviews / July 6, 2016

2015 Lasseter Family Winery Rosé Enjoué Sonoma Valley

by Meg Houston Maker

“Brisk and well-laundered...”

A blend of 70 percent Syrah, 18 percent Mourvèdre, and 12 percent Grenache, farmed organically by famous (infamous?) Sonoma organic grower Phil Coturri. Fruit was sourced from the Justi Creek Vineyard’s Creekside Blocks, which lie along the east side of Calabasas Creek in Glen Ellen, the vines anchored in gravelly alluvial fan.

The wine is a pale watermelon pink with aromas of ripe strawberry, faint pine, and pink peppercorns. There is an ornament of dried herbs and macerated fruits, too, and the palate also suggests steeped or dried red berries. A rosé with good substance and a cleansing grip, but the general effect is brisk and well-laundered.

13.5% abv | $28 (sample) | 500 cases made

Written By
Meg Houston Maker

More from Meg Houston Maker

Top Wine Accessories

What’s your favorite wine accessory? In my latest column for Palate Press, I...

Read More